

Ice Flow

The new game from Ludorum Games has repeated the success of their first game in being voted “Best New Board Game” at the UK Games Expo.

Ice Flow has the players racing their team of explorers from ice floe to ice floe across the Bering Strait. First to get all their men to Siberia wins.

The board shows the Bering Strait and its prevailing currents. Players move ice flows, according to the currents, and their explorers – or vice versa. Explorers need rope to cross ice ridges and fish to fortify them for crossing the open sea – and to distract the polar bears! Though they only have room for three things in their rucksack.

This is a clever game of manoeuvre and planning that is good fun – especially when those best-laid plans go wrong.

The ice floes are clear blue plastic pieces that enhance the look of the game. But how can anyone resist a game that includes polar bears?
